

Steve: Okay. This is Steven Barnes welcoming you back to session two of Your First Hundred Thousand Dollars, with genius hypnotist entrepreneur Terry Brussel. So, Terry – ah, boy – we’re kind of moving now. And we covered a lot of stuff in our first session. And the most important thing is the idea of finding your passion, finding something that you are totally passionate about. And the next step is finding the person who needs, who you can communicate that passion to, to be sure that there is an audience for that passion. So talk to us a little bit about that, would you?

Terry: Well, the way I did this, figuring out my ideal client, I had to figure out who needs what I have to offer. And that was pretty general to begin with, because anybody who needs to quit smoking or lose weight or raise their income or relax or become more creative, anybody who needs to make use of their abilities in any way at all is my client. But who’s my ideal client?

Steve: Right.

Terry: Well, my ideal client has to be able to pay for my services.

Steve: Good point.

Terry: Because whether they want them or not, if they can’t pay for my services, they’re not the ideal client.

Steve: I heard it said that you want to divide things in two. One, the people you’re making money from. And the other, just your giveaway to the world. In other words, if your feeling is that you want your services to be available to anyone, make sure that you can afford to do that by having paying clients who pay you well. Then, if you want to give some of your services away, that’s your business.

Terry: Well, I don’t think you want it to be available to everyone.

Steve: Okay.

Terry: But you can select the people you want it to be available to. For example, I’ve always had as my giveaway, a pregnant woman who wants to quit smoking, she can’t afford it, I will give her the sessions.

Steve: Right. So you have that idea of 10% of what you earn is giving back to the world.

Terry: Yes, exactly.

Steve: But that means 90%, you need to make money.

Terry: That’s right. Exactly. So I’ve worked things out so that if I’m working with a student that needs to put in that initial thousand hours or ten thousand hours, they can work with people who can’t afford it. And that works great, because those people need their services, and they’re using my stuff, so they’re going to be getting a good product from that.

However, the people that want to work with primarily, unless they happen to be pregnant and wanting to quit smoking, are the people that can pay for my services. And I found that within a certain range is interesting. You have to figure out who are you offering something to that they're going to be willing to pay for. In my case, it's people who are maybe making $80,000 to $100,000 already, and they want to be able to make $150,000 or $200,000. My second best client might be the person who is making $50,000 plus, and wants to make $100,000.

Steve: You know, I think that it's critically important, if you're talking about coming from your heart space to be willing to deal with numbers. It's been my experience that people who come from their heart space have an absolute horror of dealing with numbers when it comes to money.

Terry: It's interesting, because I've been serving hypnotists and coaches since 1995, and it's amazing how many of them cannot tell me how many sessions they're doing a week. They'll say 'Oh, it varies.' And I'll have to be very specific with them and say, 'Well, in the last three months, how many sessions have you been averaging per week?' Usually, they can come up with that at that point, but some of them can't even do it then, they have no idea. 'How much did you make in the last 12 months from your coaching practice, your hypnotherapy practice?' They have no idea. I'm appalled, frankly.

Steve: Well, I think that this is a problem that pops up in a lot of different arenas. Someone will say, 'I have no idea how far it is from here to the store.' If they've been to the store, 'How far is it to the store?' 'I have no idea.' No, they're lying. They do have an idea. So I say, 'Oh, so it's a million miles away.' 'Oh, no, no, no, it's a hundred miles. No, no, no.' 'So it's next door.' 'No, no, no.' 'How far is it?' 'Well, it takes about 20 minutes to get there.' So they do have an idea, but for some reason the part of their mind that represents the reality is not the same as the part of their mind that does numbers. Unfortunately, it's the part of your mind that does numbers that balances your checkbook and asks for money. So you have to have that.

Terry: The reason that you got to have your numbers is because if you don't know where you are, you can't make a reasonable goal for getting to where you'd like to be. The person who is making $20,000 a year and says they want to make $100,000 next year had better have a heck of a plan for getting there.

Steve: Right.

Terry: And I run into these people all the time as clients, they don't really have a plan, and they make a goal that is based on maybe winning the lottery.

Steve: Right.

Terry: Well, this is not the best way to make a plan for your life. So you need to know exactly where you are. Part of where I learned that was from The E Myth by Michael Gerber. I've listened to and read many of those books and articles and so forth. And that's how I learned that you got to know your numbers. And the fact that I do this survey is how I learned people don't know their numbers.

Steve: So you have to have an idea of the amount of income your ideal client has so that you know how much you can charge them, that they can afford to pay what you need to charge in order to have the lifestyle that enables you to live with elegance, take care of yourself, and also have the money to reinvest in your continuing education.

Terry: You're right. And the interesting thing is that coaches, healers, and hypnotists were the main people I work with to increase their practices and so forth. These people frequently have the idea they need to be a starving healer, that they need to be almost in poverty.

Steve: The starving artist and the wounded healer.

Terry: Yes, exactly. And my mission, one of missions in life, is to make sure that the healer, the coach, the hypnotist learns to show himself or herself as an extremely successful person in the real world.

Steve: What was it you said to me just ten minutes ago? You can't be a beacon if your light doesn't shine.

Terry: Exactly. And what that means is you need to show your clients how they're going to be successful in the world by being successful yourself. You need to be shown as a beacon to people that want to be successful, to people who want to move to a higher level. Those are the people who can pay you for your services. Otherwise, they can't.

Steve: So you need to be able to broadcast success to them. If you're talking about teaching people how to be more successful financially, you need to more financially successful than they are, in general.

Terry: Exactly, yes.

Steve: You need to know more about that subject in some very specific way. You need to be able to define how much money you need to make in order to feel comfortable so that you feel like you're being honest when you tell people that you're successful.

Terry: Well, imagine yourself driving up to a client's business to offer them a consultation or something. I do it by phone, but some people do it in person. Imagine driving up in a beat-up old wreck of a car and telling them how they're going to earn a Mercedes Benz. Are they going to believe you? Probably not.

Steve: Right. Or a chain-smoking doctor trying to tell you how to stop smoking.

Terry: Exactly. You'd be amazed years ago how many hypnotists smoked – I was appalled. But they really do, they did. Fewer now, much fewer.

Steve: So you need to exemplify the kind of success that you're offering people. And everyone is successful at something. So you need to be honest, you know, 'What did you spend at least a thousand hours learning how to do?' If you spent a thousand hours learning how to do it, you're probably enough of an expert to be able to present yourself in that particular way. You need them to be able to find a client that can pay you enough to support a successful lifestyle. So that means that you need to be able to earn x, call it $100,000 a year, because that's just the first chunk of this. To go from zero to $100,000, you have to stair step yourself up there. How many sessions per week do you need to do in order to do that? How much per session do you need to have to charge?

Terry: And that's exactly what my whole program with my surveys on the business of coaching and hypnotherapy, my Hypnobiz newsletter, it's all about collecting those statistics of what you need to do to be able to make the living you want to make. I've got it figured out that you can make $100,000 a year as a coach, hypnotist or healer by working 20 hours a week and doing about five hours of marketing yourself a week.

Steve: Okay. And so, how much per hour do you have to charge? So that we can apply that to the question 'How much does a potential client has to earn to be able to afford us?'

Terry: Well, let's say that you want to wind up with $120 an hour in your pocket for any coaching and hypnotherapy that you do; coaching, hypnotherapy, healing, consulting, whatever. $120 an hour allows you to pay your expenses and to have enough to live comfortably.

Steve: So that gets you to $100,000 a year?

Terry: Yeah.

Steve: Okay.

Terry: And that's even figuring that you're taking two weeks out for vacation each year, and you're working the other 50 weeks 20 hours a week of actually doing the sessions with the clients. And remember, you have other things that you have to do. You have to do your bookkeeping, you have to do other things. But you also have to do five hours of marketing yourself. And that needs to be separate from any other time-consuming items you're doing.

Steve: You're also going to need time for continuing education.

Terry: Of course. But then, you're not getting paid for that, so don't mix that up with what you get paid for.

Steve: So 20 hours a week of actual working with clients at $120 an hour will get you to $100,000 a year. That's the basic equation.

Okay. So if you're charging $100 an hour, 20 hours a week, then plus additional time for your office things, that will get you to $100,000 a year. So the first thing that we have to do is to get to that standard, is to get your skills to the standard where you feel comfortable and you can make an honest statement that these skills are worth $100 an hour to your clients. Then you have to find clients who can pay $100 an hour. So this is critical. So how much does a client need to earn in order to be capable of paying that?

Terry: Well, here's something interesting. Some of it is based on how much they earn, but some of it is based on how much they really feel motivated enough to spend on this. There are people who feel their education is so important that if they make $500 in a week, they're willing to spend $100 on their education.

Steve: That's right.

Terry: There are others who make $5,000 a week and are willing to spend $150 on an evening's entertainment, but really aren't willing to spend $100 for an hour of their education.

Steve: But there's an average. So let's say if they earn over $50,000 a year, then it is probably pretty reasonable that these people are going to be open to a sales talk that would help them improve themselves at a cost of $100 an hour. Would you say that that's probably the minimum that you want to aim at or is there a lower minimum?

Terry: Well, I don't think they'd be willing to pay it for a sales talk, but they'd be willing to pay it for education.

Steve: Well, I mean that they're going to be open to a sales talk, they're going to be open to hearing what you have to say.

Terry: Yes, yes.

Steve: So somewhere around $50,000 a year is the magic line.

Terry: I think there are motivated people who make $50,000 a year who would be willing to do that. I think you're better off with people who are more in the $65,000 plus range these days.

Steve: Okay. So let's say that for the sake of being safe, your ideal client should be someone who is interested in what you have to say, who earns over $65,000 a year.

Terry: And they're more likely to be able to afford it if they are a two-income family earning that kind of money.

Steve: Yes.

Terry: In other words, a man who is supporting a wife at home who's not working who makes 65K a year, he's going to have less likelihood of being able to do that.

Steve: Now, another thing that will influence this is: Does what you're teaching directly impact their ability to make money?

Terry: Oh, yes.

Steve: In other words, if you can reasonably promise that if they listen to your advice or if they work with you, their income will go up, and you can supply them with the evidence this is true because you've worked with other people. Then they will look at what they're paying you as an investment instead of an expense.

Terry: Exactly. Yes.

Steve: So if they want to stop smoking – that's an expense, to stop smoking. But if they want to increase their sales, it's an investment.

Terry: Well, hang on. No, it's not. Figure out how much they're spending on cigarettes per week – and I do this all the time – and they're going to look at what they're going to be spending on cigarettes during the next year. And if they're thinking clearly, they're going to realize that this is a real investment, to go ahead and spend the $800 to $1,200 to quit smoking, and that otherwise they will have spent many, many, many thousands of dollars over the next many years.

Steve: So if they're smoking, it would be a really easy sales presentation to say, 'Would you invest half of what you would spend on cigarettes in the next year to stop smoking cigarettes?'

Terry: Exactly.

Steve: Now you're not only impacting their health, their social life, but they're saving money. And so, now, a person who earn less than $65,000 a year might very well be willing to give you $100 an hour if the total represents less than 50% of what they're going to spend on cigarettes over the next year anyway.

Terry: Now, here's something interesting. How important is it to them? If they're already married and they're smoking, then they have other reasons for it being important, because they don't want to expose their wife and their children to this secondhand smoke that could be killing them and so forth. But somebody who is single and smoking knows that he's cutting down his ability to meet the right woman enormously by this. Steve, you may remember in the LASFS, the L.A. Science Fiction Fantasy Association we both belong to, there was a couple that actually got together, and the sole reason they were a perfect match for each other was they both smoked, and nobody else was interested because of that.

Steve: No, I don't remember that. But I can guarantee that one of the most important indicators of success is the person that you marry, they're your primary mastermind. And so, if you look at a marriage as a business partnership that will increase your income, increase your stability, and you look at smoking as something that gets in the way of that, then once again, you can relate smoking to love to money. It seems to me, as a sales pitch, the more different things you can relate your product to, the easier it is to overcome resistance, especially if you can show people how it's going to help them make money.

Terry: That's always been an advantage with my businesses, I can always show them how this is going to make them money.

Steve: Okay. We're going to get back to that when we're talking about sales. Right now, in terms of the ideal client, it sounds like an ideal client is someone who needs what it is that you have, earns over $65,000 a year, if they have an average level of motivation. But if they have an extraordinary level of motivation, they can earn much less than $65,000 a year and still be a good client.

Terry: They can make $40,000 or $50,000 a year and still be willing to do it, because it's that important to them.

Steve: If it will save their lives, and they earn $30,000 a year, they're going to get their hands on that money, if they believe it will help them, if it will save their business. If they're making $30,000 a year and they believe that they can make $60,000 if they follow your advice, they will make the investment.

Terry: Yes, that's true.

Steve: People will go to school if they have to do that. So it's that who needs what it is that you have, who can afford the thing that you have, who knows that they need the thing that you have. I think that all of those things need to be in the same place at the same time. The person who takes the services of a coach or a consultant must have what you call the will to learn. Talk to me about that.

Terry: That's the most important thing that you can have. I learned that from my dad when I was 5-years-old. And then, as I became a hypnotherapist, he began telling me I needed to put this in all of my stuff. You'll see that in all of my tapes. If you have the will to learn and the belief in your ability to learn what you need to know to create the reality that you want to create in your life, that's how you're going to get there. It gets you anything you want. I tell people in hypnosis demonstrations, 'You have three wishes. And I'd like you to tell me what your most important wish is.' And they'll tell me 'rejuvenation' or they'll tell me 'wealth' or they'll tell me whatever it is. And I will always be able to show them that if you have the will to learn about sales, the will to learn about how to make a good living, the will to learn about how to share your passion with others, and the intense desire – this is what they talk about, of course, in Think and Grow Rich by Napoleon Hill – the intense desire to achieve that...

Steve: The burning desire, yeah.

Terry: The burning desire, yes, exactly.

Steve: So you want someone with a burning desire. But you started by talking about your passion, you have a burning desire. And your ideal client, what might be called your avatar – your ideal client is your avatar – has a burning desire as well.

Terry: Well, he has enough of the sparks for a burning desire to be ignited. And I can ignite it.

Steve: You can ignite it, you can help fuel or help him find the fuel within himself, his own passion, his own concerns. And if you can release... In other words, in our first session we talked about releasing the blocks that stop you from accessing your passion, and believing you can have the things of your dreams. If you can do that for your client, you have become the best friend they've ever had. So you look for someone who needs you, who would give anything to sit down with you and have a conversation for a day or a month, to be a friend of yours. Now, with my own clients, I often put it that teaching is free, the knowledge is free, the information is free, they're paying me for my time and my energy. The knowledge is free, but the time, the money they pay me enables me to support my family so that we can have this time together. The connection I have is from one person who is passionate to another who is passionate. If we were sitting next to each other on a plane, traveling from here to New York, we'd have a great conversation for five hours. I can't afford to do that for everybody. I'd be robbing my family. So what I look for is people who would love to sit down and talk with Steve Barnes for five hours or ten hours or 20 hours, to be my friend. And because I have a very healthy sense of self-esteem, I think almost everybody would want to be my friend. But you have to be more specific than that if you're going to build a career. Your clientele cannot be everybody.

Terry: It's an interesting thought that the knowledge and the experience is free, but you have to pay for my time. It's an interesting thought.

Steve: I'm just saying that's my approach.

Terry: I think probably most people are not going to buy that, they're going to buy your knowledge, they're going to buy your experience.

Steve: Well, no, what I'm saying is...

Terry: No, I hear you. And it's good. It's just that it's an interesting thought.

Steve: The knowledge, much of the knowledge that I have, I gained from teachers who I might've had to travel for 2,000 miles to sit at their feet. Often, they did not charge me for that. My commitment to having spent that time. The other teachers, I spent many thousands of dollars to get it from them. But I think that the information is a sacred thing.

Terry: Yes.

Steve: But I value my time. And it is I cannot afford to give my time away. And too many artists, too many healers would just love to give themselves to the world. And they end up almost homeless.

Terry: That's true. And I've seen much too much of that. I believed at one point, up until my early 20s in fact, that unless I was creating a trance, I couldn't charge for it.

Steve: Right.

Terry: So I used to talk to people about their businesses, and talk to people about their lives, then I would look at my watch literally, and begin charging them when I did the hypnosis. Well, I learned, of course, that that was invalid.

Steve: Yes, it's invalid.

Terry: And that every bit of my time that I was using to improve their lives, I should get paid for. I finally stopped doing that when a man who later became extremely successful as an author and as a business owner and so forth said, 'Terry, I don't want you to look at your watch and start doing a trance with me, because what I really need you to do today is to assist me with picking my next office manager. And you've been so valuable to me in helping me train the staff of my business that I want to be sure you know I am absolutely willing to pay you for that.'

Steve: Absolutely.

Terry: And from then on, I charged for it.

Steve: There you go.

Terry: And I had another interesting 'aha' just about three weeks ago with a client of mine, a very successful business owner. We were talking about how to speak. And, of course, I have a background in speaking, and I've doing speech coaching and so forth for years as part of my hypnotherapy. But I was doing it at no extra charge, just throwing it in. And then, I began instructing him in how to tell them what you are going to tell them, then tell them, then tell them what you told them – just very standard stuff for doing speaking. And he said, 'Oh, I never knew that.' Here's this very successful man who I just assumed knew that. Of course, you know about assume, it makes an ass out of you and me. And I began telling him about some of the basics of speaking. And he learned enough to go and give a successful speech that made him a lot of money. Because he needed to speak to a group about his latest business venture and get investors for it. Then I realized that from now on I will be charging for my speech coaching.

Steve: Absolutely.

Terry: I will not be throwing it in free.

Steve: No.

Terry: But I gave it to him free, because he gave me the 'aha'.

Steve: So this is what I want to do now. So we laid down in the first session the concept of building a quarter million dollar a year business. The first thing you do is you start your business and get up to $100,000. In order to start your business, you have to first take something that you care about enough to have spent a thousand hours having done it. And by the time you're an adult, you've spent thousands of hours doing lots of different things. Then you have to identify someone who is the perfect client for you, your avatar, the person who is the absolute perfect, they would have no sales resistance to you. If you could honestly present to them what you've got, they would open up their wallet in the moment and say, 'Take my money.' That is your perfect person. There is a feedback now between the perfect person, your avatar, and what is called your unique selling proposition. Go back to the passion. Now you have to find a way to express what it is that you are doing in a way that makes what you are doing utterly unique so they have no choice. They either talk to you or it's no one at all. So what was Terry Brussel's perfect, unique selling proposition? What was it that you saw, that you were able to say to people, 'If you work with me, you will get x. And there's no one else in the world that can do x.' Who are you in the unique selling proposition?

Terry: My unique selling proposition is that jigsaw puzzle we talked about in session one. It's being able to help people grow physically, mentally, emotionally, spiritually, and financially to the very highest level of which they are capable in this life, to reach their highest potential in all those different areas.

Steve: Okay.

Terry: And in a way, that's being a generalist, because I'm covering all of those different areas. But I'm covering them all at once. And that is my unique selling proposition.

Steve: I suggest to you that you have to go even deeper. And you can say you have been doing this for 40 years.

Terry: Well, no, I've been doing it since 1969. I will tell you it's now almost 48 years.

Steve: That's right. Almost for a half of century.

Terry: That's right.

Steve: You have been the world's leading expert in creating a holistic success body, mind, spirit, emotions, using hypnotic and other techniques.

Terry: Well, body, mind, spirit, emotions – you know what? A lot of people do that. I add the financial piece to it. And I'm proud of having that financial piece. That's why our mission statement is 'We help you reach your highest potential physically, mentally, emotionally, spiritually, and financially. And for the hypnotist, the coach, and the healer.' And we make a very good living doing it. And we're proud of that.

Steve: For 50 years.

Terry: Yes.

Steve: So what you want is the USP that no one else can say or that so few people can say it that they cannot handle the number of people who want it.

Terry: Yes. The interesting thing is that one of my psychic abilities or based on my knowledge or experience or most is I can almost always spot a unique selling proposition for any business person I'm working with.

Steve: Okay.

Terry: Something that no one else is doing that they will be able to do, that they will be able to offer to the public.

Steve: So if you have your unique selling proposition, you're the only one in the world who has this, and you can identify your avatar, the perfect customer for this, these two things lock together instantly and you have a sale. How do you determine whether or not there are enough avatars, that the thing you're trying to sell, the thing you're going to sell and the person who needs it, how do you determine whether or not there are enough of these people to be certain that you can support yourself, make that $100,000 a year?

Terry: Important addition to the Avatar concept: Please note that my ideal client is not just able to pay for my services but is also a spiritual entrepreneur. This is because my particular system of hypnotherapy and coaching is both spirit and profit based. It would appeal to such a person enough for them to consider me their best source for it. Also, that is the kind of individual who I really want to work with. I believe that it is necessary to both have a unique selling proposition which you are truly passionate about and an Avatar with whom you feel really good about working. Your ideal clients will feel your true desire to help them. You will draw them to you in the Light...

Terry: Well, now, this is interesting. I'll tell you how I did it and we can try to generalize that.

Steve: Sure.

Terry: I do trade shows, business mixers, and consciousness raising seminars, and all of this stuff. I go to all of these shows, like L.A.'s Larger Mixer, and Conscious Life Expo, and small business expos, and all of this kind of stuff. And I have a lead card that lists about 22 different things that I offer. And people can check those off as their three most important wishes. 'What are the three things that are most important to you on this list?' Or write your own wish – we have that, too. And what I can do is I can look at that and I can see if they wrote down 'spiritual growth', if they checked out 'spiritual growth', 'life mission' or 'psychic abilities', and 'raise income'. And on the income section, they said they made $65,000 plus or $100,000 plus or $200,000 plus, and they'd like to make a quarter of a million or they'd like to make a million.

And we have places for them to fill all of that out. My ideal customer and the one who I get a certain percentage of in each show, and it's enough that I can sell to those people as my primary customer, the people that have written down both the spiritual growth and the raise income, and the amount they want to raise it to, and how much they make – those are my ideal customers.

Steve: That sounds perfect.

Terry: They generally make $100,000 plus. Secondly, they may make $60,000 plus. And they would like to increase their income by at least 50% during the next year.

Steve: Great, Terry. And I'd like to offer another possibility that someone could try right now. Let's say that you ran a martial arts school in which you helped kids develop their body, mind, and spirit. And you earned over $150,000. And you'd like to teach people how to do this, and you'd like to know, 'Is there a market for this?' Google it. Put in the terms. Body, mind, spirit, martial arts, and earn $150,000 a year. And see what those search terms come up with. If you put those search terms into Google and you get 20 million hits, that means that people are looking for those things. Could there be a school? Is this a business? Is this a potential?

Terry: Steve, I may have missed something there, and our listeners may have also. What exactly do you type into Google to get what you just said?

Steve: Body, mind, spirit – put quotes around it – earn 150K in martial arts.

Terry: And that will get you that answer?

Steve: That's right. What you will get... You can use that search engine to find out how many people are looking for those things. And if there are millions of people looking for those things, you know there's an audience. Just like that. Because there are millions of people looking, they're asking the question, 'How can I use martial arts to improve my body, mind, spirit, and earn $150,000?' If that's what you're selling, if that's the thing, 'I wonder whether or not I could coach how to do this', put it into Google, find out if other people are asking the same question. If there millions of people, tens of millions of people asking that exact question, it is reasonable to conclude there is a market for this. You bet.

Terry: Google will tell you how many people asked that question?

Steve: Yes. It will tell you how many hits, how many websites are covering...

Terry: Ah!

Steve: Yes.

Terry: Okay. So that won't exactly tell you your unique selling proposition, because all these websites are covering that.

Steve: No. But it will tell you how many people are looking for it.

Terry: Then you have to discover your unique selling proposition.

Steve: Well, your unique selling proposition would be some specific. 'I am the only person in Cleveland that's teaching how to do this. I'm the only person in Cleveland that's teaching this to paraplegics. I'm the only person in Cleveland that's teaching this to paraplegics who own poodles.' You get it down as tight as possible until you can see one person who is perfect for the thing you are doing, that's your avatar. Your unique selling proposition becomes... They are the lock, you are the key. You're looking for the perfect match. And now everything you're doing, all your sales, all your marketing, knowing where to find these people. 'Where do I find one-legged martial artist who wants to make $150,000, and owns poodles?' There's going to be some way of finding him. And then you drill down as tight as you need to, to differentiate yourself from the market. Because the only way to reach a huge market – everybody interested in martial arts – would be if you could compete with the biggest chains and have that kind of advertising. When you can decrease the pool until it's smaller, and smaller, and smaller – now you can get it small enough that it's just a little puddle you can jump up and down in to make a splash. So as long as there are enough people that you can say, 'If I got one percent of this audience paying $100 an hour, could I make $100,000 a year?' If one percent of the people who are looking for this is more than enough to make $100,000 a year, I say go for it. Because now you're saying, 'Are you willing to be the best? Are you willing to be in the top 10%?' Because you don't even need to be the best in your field, the top 10% in any field is always working. It's the bottom 20% that are in the most trouble. So just make sure you're not in the bottom 20%. Aim at being in the top 20% in your arena. You're in the top 20% of the top 20% of the top 20%, so you've gone way beyond that. But a person who's just in the top 20% of hypnotists is going to make $100,000 a year. Don't you think?

Terry: Top 20% of hypnotists? Yeah, I think you're right. I think they would be making that.

Steve: They'd squeak across that line.

Terry: I'd have to check that. Because I know according to my surveys, most of them are earning a lot lower than that.

Steve: I think the average hypnotist is probably earning about $20,000, $25,000 a year.

Terry: Most hypnotists and coaches are working a day job and doing this very part-time. And eventually they get really tired of doing it very part-time and they quit or they might be the person who just really loves it, they go to a lot of hypnotist conventions and so forth, but they never managed to make a living out of it.

Steve: Right.

Terry: And then they go back to their day job after the convention is over.

Steve: If you think to yourself, 'I can never be the best', is one thing. But aiming at being in the top 20% is probably a matter of 'Are you willing to spend a thousand hours really studying?'

Terry: I'm much more comfortable with the top 10%.

Steve: I don't blame you.

Terry: I don't think the top 20% are earning $100,000 in hypnotherapy.

Steve: Okay.

Terry: I think it's the top 10% who are earning that.

Steve: Fine. So how many hours of practice, and study, and marketing would it require to get there on average?

Terry: I can say that you would need to be equally studying hypnotherapy or coaching or both – and I suggest both – and sales. And if you were taking, say, you're talking about a thousand hours, let's say you took five hundred hours of your time to study sales and five hundred hours of your time to study hypnotherapy, you'd be a lot closer to the mark that you were when you started. If you had a thousand hours in both categories, even better.

Steve: But we're cheating, Terry. What we're doing is we're saying 'Start with something you love', which means you've already put a lot of that time in.

Terry: That's true.

Steve: In other words, someone who has invested in this program is cutting line. They're getting up to close to the front of the line, because they've already invested tens, hundreds, possibly thousands of hours in becoming really good at something because they loved it. Now all they have to do is learn how to organize it, how to find the perfect person.

Terry: By the way, one way that you can get these hours in – you can't actually do hypnotherapy in this time, but you could study sales, you could study hypnotherapy, you could really listen to information on the subject – is in your car.

Steve: Right.

Terry: You keep listening in your car, and you're making your time do double duty every minute you've got in your car as your mobile university.

Steve: And that is our next session, is how do you develop the skills. Do you believe that you can create a hypnotic induction that will help someone to visualize the heart and the presence of their perfect avatar? Do you think you can do that for us, Terry?

Terry: Yes. And then draw that avatar to them so they're actually drawing them into their presence, into their lives, and into their business on the etheric plane, if you will; as well by doing the real stuff out there, of talking to people, and going to shows, and advertising yourself in the Internet, and all of that, but also to do it metaphysically at the same time you're doing the practical stuff.

Steve: If you can do that, to help them to refine their unique selling proposition, to find their unique selling proposition, and their avatar, and begin to bring these two things together, you will have given people something that most people spend a whole lifetime trying to find. Can you do that, Terry?

Terry: I can.

Steve: Are you willing to accept this assignment?

Terry: I am willing to accept this assignment.

Steve: All right. Well, then we're going to close this session. And then, I suggest you click on the link that will give you the transformative trance that Terry is going to create for you. And then, after that, I want you to take notes and study it. And we'll see you again next week.

Terry: Thanks for joining us.
